NATIONAL NEWS:

As temperatures around the southland heat up, safety experts are urging parents to be ware of children's safety around the pool. An estimated 260 children under the age of five drown every year, according to the Consumer Product Safety Commission. This is the equivalent to one pre-school class every month. To help reduce this statistic, experts recommend taking a number of safety precautions around the pool. Here's more.

POOL SAFETY

NATIONAL NEWS:

Julie Vallese, US Consumer Product Safety Commission

"to put that in perspective, that's about one pre-school class every month."we are really stressing that this should be the season of caution for parents. That supervision and consistently watching your child when they are in the swimming pool is key to their safety."

To keep your pool safe for children, the c-p-s-c recommends putting a barrier fence, at least four feet high, around all four sides of the pool. Make sure all doors leading to the pool are secure with alarms...and, most important, know where the children are at all times

"if a child goes missing and there is a pool in the general area look in the pool first because when it comes to drowning every second counts.”

Ralf Vallani has this advice for grandparents.

I would urge every grandparent to do what ever they can to get their grandchildren to learn how to swim as early as possible.”

FASHION ENTERTAINMENT:

Ever wonder how certain types of jeans can pinpoint an era? Levi Strauss during the gold rush... 50's rolled up jeans.. 70's bell bottom jeans and of course the 80's stone washed jeans. But today.. There's a new league of jeans called premium denim. Heather Dawson shows us why many are willing to pay top dollar for this latest craze:
